A Message from John McGlade: Update on the Airgas Offer

Friday March 5

It has now been a month since we made our $60.00 per share cash offer for Airgas. In that time Airgas' Board of Directors rejected our offer, and we began a fully financed tender offer directly to their shareholders for all Airgas shares on February 11. In response to this, Airgas recommended on February 22 that its shareholders reject our offer. We immediately responded and countered what we believed to be misleading claims in their response. When we announced this offer, I told you it would be a long process, and this is just an example of the time involved in such an offer.

I have had feedback that the process is confusing and would like to explain a few of these terms and actions. But first, I want to be very clear about our intention. We are committed to pursuing this offer and will take all the necessary steps to complete the transaction. We believe it is a compelling transaction and a good strategic fit for both companies. Unfortunately for Airgas shareholders, their Board has continued to deny them the opportunity to receive this premium cash offer.

A consistent comment I have heard is that "hostile takeover" and Air Products just don't seem to go together." The reason our offer has been termed a "hostile takeover" has nothing to do with the actions we have taken. The term 'hostile takeover' means simply that a company's Board of Directors has rejected the offer and will not present it to its shareholders. This is in contrast to a 'friendly takeover' where the company's Board recommends that its shareholders approve the offer. In other words, the reason our offer has been called 'hostile' is because Airgas's Board has refused to talk to us and to present the offer to its shareholders, not because of anything Air Products has done.

We believe in the value of this acquisition for Airgas' shareholders and Air Products' shareholders. The ability to leverage two outstanding and complementary groups of employees to create the largest North American industrial gas company and a leading international company with distinctive strengths is exciting and strategically smart. It will create growth and opportunities for the employees and customers of both companies.

Another question has been around the stock price. As I have mentioned before, this type of transaction usually does have an expected, short-term impact on the stock, because it creates uncertainty and speculation around the two companies as they work through the offer.

I have heard other questions with themes around how we would integrate the two companies. While we are thinking and planning for an eventual integration, it is premature to talk about that now. Right now, we are focused on taking our attractive offer to Airgas' shareholders and are prepared to see that through.

We will continue to keep you informed as new developments occur. You can look for these on CorpNews as they happen. For more information regarding this transaction, I'd also encourage you to visit www.airproducts.com/airgasoffer. This is a public site we keep updated with communications about the offer.

I want to thank you for your support. I appreciate your kind words and enthusiasm as I have spoken with many of you since we made this announcement. One person asked me what she could do to help. I want to share my answer, because I really need everyone to do this. We must keep our eye on our goals of a 17% margin and double-digit earnings per share (EPS) growth. This means driving continuous improvement, lowering our costs and getting new sales as the economy begins to rebound. It is very important at this time that we show our investors and our customers that we are focused on their best interests.

Finally and most importantly, as we approach the first day of spring and say good-bye to a stubborn winter for many employees, I want to encourage you to be conscious of your personal safety and those around you.

John McGlade
